Great news! Our school has access to ProQuest Education Journals, the advanced Internet-based learning tool for educators in need of professional development resources.

ProQuest Education Journals delivers more than 650 full-text magazine and journal titles addressing all aspects of K-12 education.

The wealth of sources support teachers and administrators alike—whether they are studying for advanced degrees, using the database for professional in-service, researching material for classroom application, or using the database for self-guided study and refreshers.

The database supports NCLB Teacher Quality objectives. Teachers can improve their subject area, technology literacy, and instructional expertise through access to articles and references that model excellence in teaching and learning. These attributes and others meet NCLB requirements, qualifying for purchase through funds such as Title II-A and II-D.

Researchers at any level of expertise can search by keyword, subject, or publication. Power searchers can use up to 21 easily accessible indexed fields to construct targeted queries. Marked lists and durable links make it easy to save articles. And users can view, print, or email any article in one easy step.

Additional new features in ProQuest help save time and make research easier. Grouped results tabs help users quickly narrow, navigate, and select articles. My Research Summary Pages save marked articles, recent searches, and visited publications as HTML and durable links for future use. The Print Bibliography function creates instant citations in seven different styles.
